Exhibits:

1) I Am Psyched! Inspiring Histories, Inspiring Lives: Women of Color in Psychology

A multimedia traveling exhibit developed in collaboration with the Women's Programs Office of the American Psychological Association and the Cummings Center for the History of Psychology for a special edition of the Smithsonian's Museum Day Live! on March 12, 2016, see <https://www.apa.org/pi/women/iampsyched/video-archive>

Through panels, videos, and interactives, it explores the history and contemporary contributions of women of color in psychology. It is designed to engage girls of color and excite them about careers in the social and behavioral sciences. I was on the 3-member project development team that conceptualized the exhibit, procured grants, sourced and wrote content, and oversaw production, implementation, and launch. We also developed digital content and curriculum materials for high school and college use. The exhibit traveled across the United States for 4 years after its launch, in conjunction with events at colleges and universities. It is now a digital exhibit through the Smithsonian Learning Labs platform: <https://learninglab.si.edu/collections/i-am-psyched-virtual-exhibit/z32BDp9gEY16yORs>

2) “Off the couches, into the streets!”: Psychology and social change in the long 1960s

A physical exhibit developed in collaboration with the National Museum of Psychology at the Cummings Center for the History of Psychology in Akron, OH. Through objects, videos, photographs, audio, and text, this exhibit will explore the involvement of psychologists in the Black Power, Women’s Liberation, and Gay Rights movements and asks: How did these social movements influence psychology, and how did psychology contribute to social change? The disciplinary formations of Black psychology, feminist psychology, and lesbian and gay psychology emerged during this time to enrich, challenge, and transform psychological understandings of what it means to be human. In returning to the 1960s, we explore how the psychological and the political intersected, and imagine the role of psychology in the next social revolution. Launch date: June, 2027.

Digital Projects and Knowledge Mobilization:

1) Psychology’s Feminist Voices Oral History and Digital Archive Project

<http://www.feministvoices.com>

A multimedia digital archive featuring over 350 original profiles of women in psychology's past and contemporary feminist psychologists and an original collection of over 130 oral history interviews with feminist psychologists. The site houses the full interview transcripts, video clips, five digital exhibits, an original documentary, and multiple teaching resources. The site has hosted well over one million “unique” visitors since 2010, has over 6200 Facebook followers, over 4100 X (Twitter) followers, and over 940 Instagram followers. 300 videos are available on our associated YouTube channel with over 1800 subscribers and over 200,000 views. I developed the site with Kelli Vaughn-Johnson and oversee all content. All materials have been written or produced by members of the Psychology’s Feminist Voices team and our collaborators – see <https://feministvoices.com/aboutUs>

- Reviewed in Sex Roles DOI: 10.1007/s11199-014-0349-9

- PFV’s Twitter account was selected by Bustle magazine in 2015 as one of its “15 Feminist Twitter Accounts You Need to Follow Right Now,” writing: “If you're interested in the academic side of feminism, whether it's as an academic yourself or as somebody with an interest in psychology, this Twitter about feminist women in psychology is going to give you conniptions. It's not all about history, either: it rages about academic wage gaps and inequality today, joins in theoretical debates about intersectional feminism, and generally wields its intelligence for serious good.” – see <https://www.bustle.com/articles/119375-15-feminist-twitter-accounts-you-need-to-follow-right-now>

2) Gender Matters: Using Gender-Based Analysis in Psychology video series. A 7-video series produced with funding from the Association for Psychological Science to teach undergraduate psychology students the what, why, and how of gender-based analysis. Videos include: 1: What is Gender-Based Analysis; 2: Sex vs. Gender; 3: Rethinking Research Priorities and Outcomes; 4: Examining Concepts and Theories; 5: Formulating Research Questions; 6: Analyzing Factors Intersecting with Sex and Gender; 7: Language and Visual Representations. They have a total of over 70,000 views on YouTube. The videos are accompanied by Teaching Guides. Editing and production by Alexandra Fox. Winner of a 2017 Teaching Resource Award from the Society for the Psychological Studies of Social Issues.

3) “Feminist Psychologists Talk About...” video series. Three thematic videos produced by the Psychology’s Feminist Voices team on intersectionality, research methods, and women’s mental health and feminist therapy. Videos include discussion questions and resources to enhance their classroom use. They have a total of over 61,000 views on YouTube, have been incorporated into online student resource packages by Mcmillan Learning, and are also available at the project website: <https://feministvoices.com/projects/talk-about>

4) “This is what a psychologist looks like” is a 4-minute video featuring prominent women of color talking about how and why they became psychologists and what inspires them about the field. Developed as part of the Museum Day Live! pop-up exhibit, Inspiring histories, inspiring lives: Women of color in psychology. Editing and production by Alexandra Fox. https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=M_X_5XN33n8&t=22s

5) The Changing Face of Feminist Psychology: A Video Documentary and Teaching Tool (©Rutherford, 2007, 2009) <https://feministvoices.com/projects/face-of-feminist-psychology>

This 40-minute documentary, written and produced by myself and a team of students, presents historical and contemporary issues in feminist psychology. It chronicles the synergy between the second wave of the women’s movement and the emergence of feminist psychology and features experts in the field talking about ongoing challenges and future directions. It has been requested by and disseminated widely to individual instructors and university libraries. It has been viewed on YouTube over 25,000 times. •Reviewed in Signs http://ffc.twu.edu/issue_1-2/rev_rl_film_1-2.html

6) SPSSI Was There: An Interactive Timeline
<http://www.spssitimeline.org/>

An interactive timeline developed to convey the synergy between science and society through the history of the Society for the Psychological Study of Social Issues. It features original text, photos, videos, and other archival material displaying the multiple ways social science has been deployed to address social and political concerns throughout the 20th and into the 21st century. I developed the site with a small team and wrote and uploaded all of the historical text and materials.
